

Mr. BACON. Madam Speaker, I rise today to recognize the passing of Omaha's last surviving Tuskegee Airmen, Robert Holts, who passed away on February 12 at his retirement home in Bellevue.

He joined the still-segregated U.S. Army in November 1942, and quickly landed in an aviation training program that would lead to a slot in the 332nd Fighter Group known as the Tuskegee Airmen. Not only did he and other members make history as the first all-Black unit, but they also made history through their exemplary service, and they changed America for the better and forever.

The famed Tuskegee Airmen protected Allied bombers during the last 2 years of World War II. They were the first group of African-American military pilots and airmen in the U.S. Army Air Corps, and Holts was one of the 21 Tuskegee Airmen that had ties to Omaha.

Holts continually surmounted the challenges of racism, segregation policies, and the Great Depression faced in his life.

Born in 1924, Holts attended Kellom Elementary School and Omaha Central High School. Holts had a strong high school record, and he was given the opportunity to join an aviation program that flew P-51 Mustangs. They became known as the Tuskegee Airmen, a nod to the name of the base they trained at. More than 15,000 missions were flown by the Tuskegee Airmen, and they destroyed 261 German aircraft.

After the war, Holts worked as a U.S. Postal Service employee for nearly 40 years before settling in North Omaha near family. A little more than 60 years later, Holts and his fellow Tuskegee Airmen were awarded the Congressional Gold Medal for their heroic actions in World War II. Not only have they been lauded for their actions as fighters for our country in a world war, but as fighters for civil rights for all.

Our country is better and stronger because of the Tuskegee Airmen and heroes like Robert Holts. We shall always remember the legacy of Robert Holts.

HONORING GINA PONCE AND B.C. CLARK

Mr. BACON. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor two women from our district for Women's History Month because of their commitment to advancing opportunities and experiences for women. Gina Ponce and B.C. Clark are historymakers, as they work to empower women in our community.

Born and raised in the Bronx, Gina has been in Nebraska for 25 years and is the mother of two sons and grandmother to one granddaughter. She credits her father as her inspiration in serving others, as he led by example in his service to the community.

Gina has been in her current position as director of Latino community outreach at Bellevue University since 2015, where she is responsible for managing outreach and admissions including the Latino community.

She sees her two biggest accomplishments as founding the Women on a Mission nonprofit 11 years ago and opening the El Camino Latino Center at Bellevue University. Women on a Mission engages in outreach to build up and empower women and girls spiritually, physically, and emotionally.

Recent awards she received include the 2020 Heartland United for Puerto Rico Award, the 2017 Women of Color Leadership Award, and the 2013 Latina of the Year. However, Gina says she sees her award every day in the success of those she has helped, and she credits her own success to the passion and gifts that come out of the South Omaha community.

Also passionate about assisting women in their visions and dreams is the founder and president of the Metro Omaha Women's Business Center, B.C. Clark. She continues to inspire women and accelerate their success by creating economic opportunities through programs offered by her center. Those opportunities include a monthly business forum, quarterly Success Series, and various workshops and trade shows to educate, inspire, and encourage entrepreneurs and businessowners.

In 2014, B.C. also started the Business Connection Nebraska, a local television show on public access TV, where she showcases businessowners from across the State. She is also a well-respected speaker and mentor for several community and minority business groups, where her knowledge of how to increase profitability and operational efficiency, as well as satisfy customer expectations, has helped many businessowners excel professionally.

In addition, B.C. volunteers at Carole's House of Hope, where she mentors inner-city young women. She is a former president of the Midlands Latino Community Development Center, encouraging and promoting Latino businesses.

B.C. credits her faith as a factor in her own achievement and is quick to recognize others who have helped her in her quest to help others find success. She also recognizes that a belief in yourself will make you successful. As she told her own granddaughters: "You don't have to wait for a man to give you a diamond ring. If you want it, you can work for it."

Both Gina Ponce and B.C. Clark are role models not only for women, but for our community, as they have demonstrated their service to help others succeed. Because of leaders such as they, the numbers of businesses owned by women in the United States has increased by 114 percent in the last 20 years, and 64 percent of new women-owned businesses were started by women of color.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Margaret Grun Kibben, offered the following prayer:

Tender and loving God, we come to You on this International Women's Day in gratitude for the care and example You have lifted up before us in the women whose lives in some way have touched our own, and those whose virtue in the face of untold and inconceivable challenges has provided for us a legacy of fortitude and faith.

For women like Rahab and Deborah whose bravery and courage challenged expectations and changed the course of nations.

For countless and hidden figures who continue to challenge institutional norms, influencing and enriching national research, advancements in technology, social sciences, and the arts.

For the unheralded mothers who challenge the hours in a day and find ways to manage households and nurture young leaders.

For the faithful, like Mary, Ruth, and Esther who in the face of cultural challenges, nonetheless yielded to Your will and effected Your loving plan for Your people.

As we go about our business and address the concerns of these days, may we hear from the wisdom of these paragons, the teaching of kindness. May we learn from their lives' work, the importance of courage. May we be inspired by the strength and honor of these women, that our conduct would be worthy of their virtuous history.

Like them, Almighty God, call each of us to choose to challenge the limiting prejudice of expectations, the destructive norms of injustice, the overwhelming crush of daily living; that in facing these challenges, each of us would prove faithful to and honor the gift of life You give us this day.

We pray in the abiding love of Your holy name.

Amen.
